Fund Manager Comment

Portfolio performance: The Fund underperformed the market in October primarily due to ETFs closing substantially below NAV on the final day.

Asia-Pacific ex Japan Market review: Asian markets partially recovered in October led by South East Asia (Indonesia +9%, Singapore +3.8%) and Australia (+3.8%). Indonesia advanced on hopes of a cyclical recovery from COVID re-opening. Australia gained on expectations that the Reserve Bank of Australia would either raise interest rates or cease its yield curve targeting measures.

Korea (-2.3% and India (-0.7%) were the worst performing markets. India paused after strong performance YTD. Momentum is slowing and a significant correction is due, albeit in the context of a longer term bull market. Korea struggled as consensus positioning in favour of cyclical markets & stocks, unwinds.

Outlook: Asia has been in a correction since January. Whilst most of the correction is behind us, especially in China, there are still some markets which are trading at very high valuations. Chinese internet stocks are now cheap and attractive over the longer term but other markets are yet to correct so absolute performance will continue to be subdued. The extreme bullishness from early 2021 has now largely reversed and we are starting to see signs of pessimism which is positive from a future performance perspective. Once some of the other medium sized markets ex-China correct, then Asia can start to outperform again.
